Lonely Planet Writer 8 January 2020 Travellers are flocking to Denmark in record numbers, but many don't stray beyond Copenhagen to experience the Nordic country's charming small towns. Consider Vejle \u0026amp; an unassuming former port city conveniently located about 30 minutes from Legoland in Billund and less than 2\u00bd hours from the capital.

Why Vejle is Denmark's most underrated city - Lonely Planet

Copenhagen is the epitome of Scandi cool. Modernist lamps light New Nordic tables, bridges buzz with cycling commuters and eye-candy locals dive into pristine waterways.

Things are on the way up for Aalborg, Denmark's fourth-largest city. It sits at the narrowest point of the Limfjord (the long body of water that slices Jutland in two), and recent developments have seen the waterfront become the focal point of the town. A concerted effort is being made to rejuvenate the central industrial areas and turn neglected spaces into something far more appealing ...

Lonely Planet Writer. 17 minutes ago. 2020 has not been the best year for air travel, but we have hope that we will still feel the rush of settling into our window seat, pulling out our headphones and book and getting lost in that liminal moment between where we were and where we are going. If there is a person on your list longing for a return to those quiet stretches in cramped quarters, we ...
